New Mexico Supreme Court

Proposed Amendments to Rules of Practice and Procedure

Several Supreme Court Committees are considering whether to recommend for the Supreme Court's consideration proposed amendments to the rules of practice and procedure summarized in the March 16 issue of the Bar Bulletin (Vol. 55, No. 10). To view and comment on the proposed amendments summarized below before they are submitted to the Court for final consideration, submit comments electronically through the Supreme Court's website at http://nmsupremecourt.nmcourts.gov, by email to nmsupremecourtclerk@nmcourts.gov, by fax to 505-827-4837, or by mail to Joey D. Moya, Clerk, New Mexico Supreme Court, PO Box 848, Santa Fe, New Mexico 87504-0848

Comments must be received by the Clerk on or before April 6 to be considered by the Court. Note that any submitted comments may be posted on the Supreme Court's website for public viewing.

New Mexico Board of Bar Examiners

Services for Attorneys

The New Mexico Board of Bar Examiners provides the following services to New Mexico attorneys: duplicate licenses; certification of bar application and examination dates, bar passage, MPRE scores, and admission dates; copies of bar applications; and reinstatement applications. Attorneys must request their own file documents and certifications; these items are not available to the general public. For information and fees, visit http://nmexam.org/attorney-services/.

New Mexico Court of Appeals 50th Anniversary Celebration

Join the New Mexico Court of Appeals in celebrating its 50th Anniversary at an open house reception from 4–6 p.m., April 1, at the Pamela B. Minzner Law Center. R.S.V.P.. to the COA Clerks' Office at 505-841-4618 or by email to Aletheia Allen at coaava@nmcourts.gov by March 25. Parking is available in the L lot only.

Second Judicial District Court

Notice to Attorneys:

Gov. Susana Martinez appointed David Williams to fill the vacancy of Division IX at the Second Judicial District Court. Effective Feb. 29, Judge Williams will be assigned criminal court cases previously assigned to Judge Judith Nakamura's special calendar. Individual notices of reassignment will be sent for active pending cases. Inactive cases will be reassigned to Judge Williams by March 11. Check Odyssey to determine if an inactive case has been reassigned to Judge Williams. Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 1-088.1 parties who have not yet exercised a peremptory excusal will have 10 days from April 13 to excuse Judge David Williams.

Fifth Judicial District Court

Announcement of Vacancy

A vacancy will exist in the Fifth Judicial District Court, Chaves County, as of April 2 due to the retirement of Hon. Steven L. Bell on April 1. This will be for the Division X bench assignment. Inquiries regarding additional details or assignment of this judicial vacancy should be directed to the chief judge or the administrator of the court. Alfred Mathewson, chair of the Judicial Nominating Commission, solicits applications for this position from lawyers who meet the statutory qualifications in Article VI, Section 8 of the New Mexico Constitution. Applications can be found at http://lawschool.unm.edu/judsel/application.php. The deadline is 5 p.m., April 19. Applicants seeking information regarding election or retention if appointed should contact the Bureau of Elections in the Office of the Secretary of State. The Judicial Nominating Commission will meet at 9 a.m. on April 28 at the Chaves County Courthouse, 400 N. Virginia, Roswell, to evaluate the applicants. The Commission meeting is open to the public and members of the public who have comments about any of the candidates will have an opportunity to be heard.

Retirement Celebration for Judge Steven L. Bell

The judges and employees of the Fifth Judicial District Court invite members of the legal community to attend a retirement ceremony for the Hon. Steven L. Bell. The celebration will be at 3 p.m., March 25, at the Chaves County Courthouse, Historic Courtroom 1. A reception will follow on the first floor of the courthouse in the historic rotunda.

Professionalism Tip

With respect to opposing parties and their counsel:
I will not make improper statements of fact or of law.

Ninth Judicial District Court

Notice of Exhibit Destruction

The Ninth Judicial District Court, Roosevelt County, will destroy the following exhibits by order of the court if not claimed by the allotted time: 1) All unmarked exhibits, oversized poster boards/maps and diagrams; 2) Exhibits filed with the court, in criminal, civil, children's court, domestic, competency/mental health, adoption and probate cases for the years 1993–2012 may be retrieved through April 30; and 3) All cassette tapes in criminal, civil, children's court, domestic, competency/mental health, adoption and probate cases for years prior to 2007 have been exposed to hazardous toxins and extreme heat in the Roosevelt County Courthouse and are ruined and cannot be played, due to the exposures. These cassette tapes have either been destroyed for environmental health reasons or will be destroyed by April 30. For more information or to claim exhibits, contact the Court at 575-359-6920.

Board of Bar Commissioners

Appointments

The BBC will make the following appointments. Members who want to serve should send a letter of interest and brief résumé to executive director Joe Conte, State Bar of New Mexico, PO Box 92860, Albuquerque, NM 87199-2860; fax to 505-828-3765; or e-mail to jconte@nmbar.org.

ABA House of Delegates

The BBC will make one appointment to the American Bar Association House of Delegates for a two-year term, which will expire at the conclusion of the 2018 ABA Annual Meeting. The delegate must be willing to attend meetings or otherwise complete his/her term and responsibilities without reimbursement or compensation from the State Bar; however, the ABA provides reimbursement for expenses to attend the ABA mid-year meetings. The deadline is April 15.

Civil Legal Services Commission

The BBC will make one appointment to the Civil Legal Services Commission for a three-year term. The deadline is April 15.

Judicial Standards Commission

The Board of Bar Commissioners will make one appointment to the Judicial Standards Commission for a four-year term. The responsibilities of the Judicial Standards Commission are to receive, review and act upon complaints against State judges, including supporting documentation on each case as well as other issues that may surface. Experience with receiving, viewing and preparing for meetings and trials with substantial quantities of electronic documents is necessary. The commission meets once every eight weeks in Albuquerque and additional hearings may be held as many as four to six times a year. The time commitment to serve on this board is significant and the workload is voluminous. Applicants should consider all potential conflicts caused by service on this board. The deadline is April 15.

Risk Management Advisory Board

A vacancy exists on the Risk Management Advisory Board and a replacement needs to be appointed for the remainder of the term expiring June 30, 2018. The appointee is requested to attend the Risk Management Advisory Board meetings. A summary of the duties of the advisory board, pursuant to §15-7-5 NMSA 1978, are to review: specifications for all insurance policies to be purchased by the risk management division; professional service and consulting contracts or agreements to be entered into by the division; insurance companies and agents to submit proposals when insurance is to be purchased by negotiation; rules and regulations to be promulgated by the division; certificates of coverage to be issued by the division; and investments made by the division. The deadline is March 31.

Entrepreneurs in Community Lawyering

Announcement of New Program

The New Mexico State Bar Foundation announces its new legal incubator initiative, Entrepreneurs in Community Lawyering. ECL will help new attorneys to start successful and profitable, solo and small firm practices throughout New Mexico. Each year, ECL will accept three licensed attorneys with 0-3 years of practice who are passionate about starting their own solo or small firm practice. ECL is a 24 month program that will provide extensive training in both the practice of law and how to run a law practice as a successful business. ECL will provide subsidized office space, office equipment, State Bar licensing fees, CLE and mentorship fees. ECL will begin operations in October and the Bar Foundation is now accepting applications from qualified practitioners. To view the program description, www.nmbar.org/ECL. For more information, contact Director of Legal Services Stormy Ralstin at 505-797-6053.

Opinion

Edward L. Chávez, Justice

{1} Intervenors' motion for rehearing is denied. However, our prior opinion filed on November 12, 2015 is withdrawn and the following is substituted in its place.

{2} Since the adoption of the New Mexico Constitution on January 21, 1911, New Mexico has had a constitutional responsibility to provide a free public education for all children of school age. N.M. Const. art. XII, § 1. However, "no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands granted to the state by congress, or any other funds appropriated, levied or collected for educational purposes, shall be used for the support of any sectarian, denominational or private school, college or university." N.M. Const. art. XII, § 3 (emphasis added). The New Mexico Department of Public Education's (Department) Instructional Material Bureau purchases non-religious instructional materials selected by public or private schools, with funds appropriated by the Legislature and earmarked for the schools, and lends these materials to qualified students who attend public or private schools. NMSA 1978, § 22-15-7 (2010); see also NMSA 1978, § 22-8-34 (2001). The question we address in this case is whether the provision of books to students who attend private schools violates Article XII, Section 3. We conclude that the New Mexico Constitutional Convention was not willing to navigate the unclear line between secular and sectarian education, or the unclear line between direct and indirect support to other than public schools. Indeed, in 1969 the voters rejected a proposed constitutional amendment that would have required New Mexico to provide free textbooks to all New Mexico school children. See Proposed New Mexico Constitution (as adopted by the Constitutional Convention of 1969) 45 (October 20, 1969). We hold that the plain meaning and history of Article XII, Section 3 forbids the provision of books for use by students attending private schools, whether such schools are secular or sectarian.

I. The Instructional Material Law is funded by appropriations

{3} The Instructional Material Law (IML), NMSA 1978, §§ 22-15-1 to -14 (1967, as amended through 2011), grants the Department's Instructional Material Bureau statutory authority to lend approved instructional materials[1] to "[a]ny qualified student . . . attending a public school, a state institution or a private school approved by the department in any grade from first through the twelfth grade of instruction . . . ." Section 22-15-7(A) (emphasis added). "Instructional material shall be distributed to school districts, state institutions and private schools as agents for the benefit of students entitled to the free use of the instructional material." Section 22-15-7(B) (emphasis added). In turn, "[a]ny school district, state institution or private school as agent receiving instructional material pursuant to the Instructional Material Law is responsible for distribution of the instructional material for use by eligible students and for the safekeeping of the instructional material." Section 22-15-7(C) (emphasis added).

[1] " '[I]nstructional material' means school textbooks and other educational media that are used as the basis for instruction, including combinations of textbooks, learning kits, supplementary material and electronic media." Section 22-15-2(C); see also § 22-15-3(A) ("The 'instructional material bureau' is created within the department of education [public education department]." (alteration in original)).

Students or their parents are "responsible for the loss, damage or destruction of instructional material while the instructional material is in the possession of the student." Section 22-15-10(B).

{4} The Department is required to publish a "multiple list" of state-approved instructional materials. Section 22-15-8(A), (B); § 22-15-2(D) (" '[M]ultiple list' means a written list of those instructional materials approved by the department."). Using the multiple list of state-approved instructional materials, "each school district, state institution or private school as agent may select instructional material for the use of its students . . . ." Section 22-15-8(B). "At least ten percent of instructional material on the multiple list concerning language arts and social studies shall contain material that is relevant to the cultures, languages, history and experiences of multi-ethnic students." Section 22-15-8(A). Moreover, "[t]he Department shall ensure that parents and other community members are involved in the adoption process at the state level." Id.

{5} The IML is funded through a non-reverting "instructional material fund" established by the State Treasurer "consist[ing] of appropriations, gifts, grants, donations and any other money credited to the fund." Section 22-15-5(A). In 1931, the Legislature enacted the State School Building, Text Book and Rural Aid Fund to purchase instructional materials with unappropriated federal funds obtained through the Mineral Lands Leasing Act (MLLA), 30 U.S.C. §§ 181 to 287 (1920, as amended through 2012). N.M. Laws 1931, ch. 138, § 2 ("There is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this fund, annually, all of the balance, not otherwise appropriated, in the [MLLA] Fund . . . ."). Today the Department's Instructional Material Bureau continues to purchase instructional materials for New Mexico students using federal MLLA funds. See § 22-8-34(A) ("Except for an annual appropriation to the instructional material fund and to the bureau of geology and mineral resources of the New Mexico institute of mining and technology . . . all other money received by the state pursuant to the provisions of the federal [MLLA], shall be distributed to the public school fund." (citation omitted)).

{6} Each public and private school is allocated a percentage of money available in the IML fund based on the number of students enrolled in their school. Section 22-15-9(A). "Private schools may expend up to fifty percent of their instructional material funds for items that are not on the multiple list; provided that no funds shall be expended for religious, sectarian or nonsecular materials . . . ." Section 22-15-9(C) (emphasis added). Such instructional material purchases must be identified and purchased through the Department's in-state depository. Section 22-15-9(C), (E); see also § 22-15-4(D). "Any balance remaining in an instructional material account of a private school at the end of the fiscal year shall remain available for reimbursement by the department for instructional material purchases in subsequent years." Section 22-15-9(F). The Department's Instructional Material Bureau has the authority to "withdraw or withhold the privilege of participating in the free use of instructional material in case of any violation of or noncompliance with the provisions of the Instructional Material Law or any rules adopted pursuant to that law." Section 22-15-4(C).

{7} In summary, the Legislature appropriates instructional materials funds and private schools are allocated a percentage of the funds based on the number of students enrolled in their schools. Private schools select instructional materials from a multiple list, but they may spend up to 50 percent of their instructional materials funds on items that are not on the multiple list, as long as the material is not religious in content. Any money remaining in the private schools instructional material fund may be carried over to subsequent years. Once the materials are purchased, the materials are loaned to the students. Hereafter in this opinion we will refer to this process as a "schoolbook loan program" for ease of reference.

II. Procedural history

{8} Plaintiffs-Petitioners Cathy Moses and Paul F. Weinbaum (Petitioners) are New Mexico residents and have been taxpayers for at least the past five years. Petitioners currently have one or more children enrolled in elementary and/or secondary public schools in New Mexico. As New Mexico residents and taxpayers, Petitioners assert that the IML violates their constitutional rights because it supposedly forces them to "support[] and aid[] the religious dictates of others with whom they disagree"; appropriates or donates public funds to private parties; and supports "sectarian, denominational or private school[s]."

{9} Petitioners filed a verified complaint for declaratory judgment in the district court against Defendant-Respondent Hanna Skandera (Respondent), Secretary of the Department, seeking a declaration that the State issuing instructional materials to students attending private schools is unconstitutional because doing so supports sectarian, denominational, or private schools in violation of New Mexico Constitution Article XII, Section 3; forces them as taxpayers to support the religious dictates of others in violation of New Mexico Constitution Article II, Section 11; and appropriates or donates public funds to private parties in violation of New Mexico Constitution Article IX, Section 14. Petitioners also relied on Zellers v. Huff, 1951-NMSC-072, 55 N.M. 501, 236 P.2d 949 to support their allegation that the schoolbook loan program is unconstitutional.

{10} Petitioners filed a motion for summary judgment, and Respondent and Albuquerque Academy, et al. (Intervenors) each filed a memorandum in opposition. The district court ruled that Zellers did not control and the provisions of the IML challenged by Petitioners did not violate the New Mexico Constitution. The district court then entered its order denying Petitioners' motion for summary judgment and granted summary judgment to Respondent.

{11} Petitioners appealed to the Court of Appeals, which affirmed the district court's grant of summary judgment to Respondent. Moses v. Skandera, 2015-NMCA-036, ¶¶ 3, 54, 346 P.3d 396, cert. granted, 2015-NMCERT-001. We granted Petitioners' petition for writ of certiorari to consider the following issues: (1) whether this Court's decision in Zellers constituted dicta; (2) whether the IML violates Article XII, Section 3 of the New Mexico Constitution; (3) whether the IML violates Article IV, Section 31 of the New Mexico Constitution; (4) whether the IML violates Article IX, Section 14 of the New Mexico Constitution; and (5) whether the IML violates Article II, Section 11 of the New Mexico Constitution.

{12} We conclude that the schoolbook loan program violates Article XII, Section 3, and therefore we do not address the remaining issues. We reverse both the Court of Appeals and the district court.

III. The IML violates Article XII, Section 3 of the New Mexico Constitution

{13} Article XII, Section 3 provides:

> The schools, colleges, universities and other educational institutions provided for by this > constitution shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the state, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands granted to the state by congress, or any other funds appropriated, levied or collected for educational purposes, shall be used for the support of any sectarian, denominational or private school, college or university.

(Emphasis added.)

{14} Whether the schoolbook loan program violates the New Mexico Constitution is a question of law that we review de novo. Tri-State Generation & Transmission Ass'n v. D'Antonio, 2012-NMSC-039, ¶ 11, 289 P.3d 1232. "It is well settled that there is a presumption of the validity and regularity of legislative enactments." Bounds v. State ex rel. D'Antonio, 2013-NMSC-037, ¶ 11, 306 P.3d 457 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Petitioners bear the burden of proof to overcome the presumption of the validity and regularity of the IML. Id. We will uphold the constitutionality of the IML unless we are satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the Legislature exceeded the bounds of the New Mexico Constitution in enacting the IML. Id.

{15} "[T]he rules of statutory construction apply equally to constitutional construction." State v. Boyse, 2013-NMSC-024, ¶ 8, 303 P.3d 830 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "[W]e examine the plain language of the statute as well as the context in which it was promulgated, including the history of the statute and the object and purpose the Legislature sought to accomplish." State v. Nick R., 2009-NMSC-050, ¶ 11, 147 N.M. 182, 218 P.3d 868 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

{16} The Court of Appeals interpreted Article XII, Section 3 to provide protection only against the establishment of religion, similar to the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution and the Establishment Clause of Article II, Section 11 of the New Mexico Constitution. Moses, 2015-NMCA-036, ¶ 22. Accordingly, the Court of Appeals relied primarily on First Amendment cases to hold that the IML did not violate Article XII, Section 3. Moses, 2015-NMCA-036, ¶ 34 (citing Elane Photography, LLC v. Willock, 2012-NMCA-086, ¶ 33, 284 P.3d 428).

{17} We might agree with the Court of Appeals if the language of Article XII, Section 3 only prohibited the use of any public funds for the support of sectarian or denominational schools. The plain language of Article XII, Section 3 is more restrictive, and it therefore stands as a constitutional protection separate from the Establishment Clause as illustrated by the difference in language in each provision.

{18} The Establishment Clause provides, in relevant part, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion . . . ." U.S. Const. amend. I. In contrast, Article XII, Section 3 provides:

> The schools, colleges, universities and other educational institutions provided for by this constitution shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the state, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands granted to the state by congress, or any other funds appropriated, levied or collected for educational purposes, shall be used for the support of any sectarian, denominational or private school, college or university.

(Emphasis added.) The plain language of Article XII, Section 3 expressly restricts the use of public funds to other than sectarian schools, and therefore our analysis cannot be restricted by cases that analyze the Establishment Clause.

{19} The historical context in which Article XII, Section 3 was adopted helps explain why this constitutional provision was not a recodification of the Establishment Clause of the New Mexico Constitution. During the early nineteenth century, public education was provided in public schools known as "common schools." See Mark Edward DeForrest, An Overview and Evaluation of State Blaine Amendments: Origins, Scope, and First Amendment Concerns, 26 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 551, 558 (2003). "The common school was designed to function as an instrument for the acculturation of immigrant populations, rendering them good productive citizens in the image of the ruling majority." Joseph P. Viteritti, Blaine's Wake: School Choice, The First Amendment, and State Constitutional Law, 21 Harv. J.L. & Pub. Pol'y 657, 668 (1998). "Protestant ministers and lay people were in the forefront of the public-school crusade and took a proprietary interest in the institution they had helped to build. They assumed a congruence of purpose between the common school and the Protestant churches." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "In many cases, it was difficult to distinguish between public and private institutions because they were often housed in the same building." Id. at 664. State statutes at the time authorized Bible readings in public schools and state judges generally refused to recognize the Bible as a sectarian book. G. Alan Tarr, The New Judicial Federalism in Perspective, 72 Notre Dame L. Rev. 1097, 1103-04 nn.22-23 (citing Miss. Const. of 1890, art. 3, § 18); Hackett v. Brooksville Graded Sch. Dist., 87 S.W. 792 (Ky. 1905); Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 379 (1854)); Viteritti, supra, at 667-68.

{20} By the middle of the nineteenth century, the Catholic immigrant population rose significantly. Viteritti, supra, at 669. The influx of Catholic immigrants created a demand for Catholic education, and consequently Catholics and other minority religionists challenged the Protestant influence in the common schools. Id. at 667-68; Steven K. Green, The Blaine Amendment Reconsidered, 36 Am. J. Legal Hist. 38, 44 (1992). By the 1870s, Catholic church leaders began to lobby their state legislatures for public funds to develop their own educational system. Viteritti, supra, at 668; Green, supra, at 44. This rise in Catholic influence created an obvious tension between the Protestant majority and the mostly Catholic minority on the issue of education, see Viteritti, supra, at 670-72, because the Protestant-run "common school was designed to function as an instrument for the acculturation of immigrant populations, rendering them good productive citizens in the image of the ruling majority." Id. at 668.

{21} In response, "[o]pposition to aid to 'sectarian' schools acquired prominence in the 1870's . . . ." Mitchell v. Helms, 530 U.S. 793, 828 (2000). "[I]t was an open secret that 'sectarian' was code for 'Catholic.' " Id. Common school leaders successfully lobbied their state legislatures to adopt amendments prohibiting the use of state funds to support sectarian schools by the mid-to-late nineteenth century. See, e.g., Colo. Const. art. IX, § 7; Del. Const. art. X, § 3; N.D. Const. art. VIII, §§ 1, 5; Ohio Const. art. VI, § 2. "In September of 1875, President Ulysses S. Grant responded to mounting political pressure when he publicly vowed to '[e]ncourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar be appropriated to support any sectarian schools.' " Viteritti, supra, at 670 (alteration in original). President Grant called on Congress to draft a proposed constitutional amendment that would deny public support to religious institutions. Id.

{22} Congressman James G. Blaine of Maine agreed to sponsor an amendment to the First Amendment that fulfilled President Grant's request. See id. at 670-71. Congressman Blaine's proposed constitutional amendment read:

> No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects and denominations.

Green, supra, at 38 n.2 (quoting 4 Cong. Rec. 5453 (1876) (quotation marks omitted)). Congressman Blaine believed that his proposed constitutional amendment would correct a "constitutional defect" because at the time, the Establishment Clause had not been interpreted to apply to the states under the Fourteenth Amendment. Viteritti, supra, at 671 n.66 (citing Permoli v. Municipality No. 1 of New Orleans, 44 U.S. (3 How.) 589, 609 (1845) ("The Constitution makes no provision for protecting the citizens of the respective states in their religious liberties; this is left to the state constitutions and laws . . . .").

{23} Despite the fact that Congressman Blaine's proposed amendment failed to pass in the United States Senate, several states amended their constitutions to include a ban on funding of sectarian education. Viteritti, supra, at 672. "By century's end [congressional] leaders had come to understand that federal aid could be used as a wedge for manipulating public policy. . . . Particularly vulnerable to the Republican agenda were those new territories seeking statehood." Id. at 672-73. "As a matter of course, [new territories seeking statehood] would be required to incorporate Blaine-like provisions into their new constitutions in order to receive congressional approval." Id. at 673.

{24} Congress granted New Mexico statehood on the explicit condition that it adopt a similar "Blaine" provision in the New Mexico Constitution. See Enabling Act for New Mexico of June 20, 1910, 36 Stat. 557, ch. 310, § 8 (Enabling Act).[2] In the Enabling Act, "Congress set forth the terms by which New Mexico would be admitted as a state." Forest Guardians v. Powell, 2001-NMCA-028, ¶ 6, 130 N.M. 368, 24 P.3d 803. In an election held on January 21, 1911 to vote on the New Mexico Constitution adopted by the Constitutional Convention of 1910, New Mexico voters ratified all of the terms of the Enabling Act in Article 21, Section 9 of the 1911 New Mexico Constitution. See Constitutions of New Mexico 1910-34. Article 21, Section 10 of the 1911 New Mexico Constitution provides that "[t]his ordinance is irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of this State, and no change or abrogation of this ordinance, in whole or in part, shall be made by any constitutional amendment without the consent of Congress." Id.; Enabling Act § 2; see also N.M. Const. art. 21, §§ 1-11 (incorporating all Enabling Act measures into the New Mexico Constitution and making the Enabling Act irrevocable without the consent of Congress and the citizens of New Mexico). Because the Enabling Act was adopted during New Mexico's 1910 Constitutional Convention, N.M. Const. art. 21, §§ 1-11, it functions as a "fundamental law to the same extent as if it had been directly incorporated into the Constitution." State ex rel. King v. Lyons, 2011-NMSC-004, ¶ 3, 149 N.M. 330, 248 P.3d 878 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

{25} Sections 6 through 9 of the Enabling Act pertain to specified public lands that were granted to New Mexico to be held in trust "for the support of common schools." Enabling Act § 6. To the extent that lands "are mineral, or have been sold, reserved or otherwise appropriated or reserved by or under the authority of any act of congress," they are to be treated as all other public lands specified under Sections 6 through 9 of the Enabling Act. Enabling Act § 6.

> Congress contemplated that any change . . . to the use of the proceeds of the lands granted to the state should be effectuated by amendment to the Constitution, and . . . any change in the use and application of the proceeds of these land grants may . . . be done by way of a constitutional amendment.

Lyons, 2011-NMSC-004, ¶ 4 (first and third omissions in original) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

{26} Grants of land were made to New Mexico specifically for, among other things, "university purposes, . . . schools and asylums for the deaf, dumb and the blind, . . . normal schools, . . . agricultural and mechanical colleges, . . . school of mines, [and] military institutes." Enabling Act § 7. Lands granted to New Mexico and any proceeds derived from them are to be held in trust. Enabling Act § 10, ¶ 1. If the lands or money so derived are used for something other than the named purposes, it is a breach of the Enabling Act. Enabling Act § 10, ¶ 2. The Enabling Act "is binding and enforceable and the legislature is without power to divert the fund for another purpose than that expressed." State ex rel. Interstate Stream Comm'n v. Reynolds, 1963-NMSC-023, ¶ 22, 71 N.M. 389, 378 P.2d 622.

{27} Specifically relevant to our inquiry is Section 8 of the Enabling Act, which may be characterized as a Blaine provision because of the time of its adoption and because it precludes the use of public funds for the support of sectarian or denominational schools.

> [T]he schools, colleges, and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the said state, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands granted herein for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college or university.

Id. This language is nearly identical to that of Article XII, Section 3, with two critical differences. The Enabling Act prohibits the use of "proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands granted [in the Enabling Act] for educational purposes" to support sectarian schools. Enabling Act § 8. In contrast, the drafters of the New Mexico Constitution restricted the use of proceeds from any lands granted to New Mexico by Congress, not only those granted in the Enabling Act, and they also restricted the use of any funds appropriated, levied, or collected for educational purposes for the support of not only sectarian schools, but also the much broader category of private schools. Through these changes, the Constitutional Convention decided to provide for additional restrictions on public funding of education beyond the restrictions required by Section 8 of the Enabling Act. See Highlights of the August 15, 1969, Session of the 1969 Constitutional Convention Submitted August 14, 1969 at 4. The members of the Constitutional Convention chose to play it safe—by broadening the provision to reach all private schools, they avoided drawing a line between secular and sectarian education. In addition, they were not willing to limit the funds that would be restricted from use for private schools—they went well beyond "proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands granted" under Section 8 of the Enabling Act and chose to restrict the use of "any other funds appropriated, levied or collected for educational purposes." N.M. Const. art. XII, § 3.

[2]Section 8 of the Enabling Act explicitly requires that

> [t]he schools, colleges and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the said state, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands granted herein for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college or university.

{28} The MLLA appropriates funds to New Mexico "to be used by such State and its subdivisions, as the legislature of the State may direct . . . , for (i) planning, (ii) construction and maintenance of public facilities, and (iii) provision of public service." 30 U.S.C. § 191(a). MLLA funds are not specifically allocated for schools or school books. The Legislature, which has the constitutional responsibility to appropriate funds, see New Mexico Constitution Article IV, Section 30, has discretion to appropriate MLLA funds for any purpose consistent with the broad purposes described in the MLLA. Intervenors contend that the provision of school books for children attending both public and private schools constitutes a "public service." Although we agree with this broad philosophical statement, the provision of school books is an educational purpose. Article XII, Section 3 controls the Legislature's discretion when money is appropriated for educational purposes by prohibiting the appropriation of educational funds to private schools.

{29} Intervenors contend that the MLLA preempts any state constitutional restriction on the Legislature's discretion with respect to MLLA funds as long as the Legislature appropriates the funds consistent with the broad purposes of the MLLA. In support of their argument, Intervenors cite to State ex rel. Sego v. Kirkpatrick, 1974-NMSC-059, 86 N.M. 359, 524 P.2d 975 and Lawrence County v. Lead-Deadwood School District No. 40-1, 469 U.S. 256 (1985). These cases are inapposite. The Sego Court held that the Legislature does not have the power to control the manner and extent of the use or expenditure of funds received by institutions of higher learning from Congress or from private donations. 1974-NMSC-059, ¶¶ 48-51. In Lawrence, the United States Supreme Court held that a federal statute specifically providing local governments with discretion in distributing federal funds preempted a state statute attempting to control how local governments allocated such funds. 469 U.S. at 261-68. Stated simply, Congress appropriated the funds to local governments, not to the State; therefore, the State did not have authority to dictate how local governments spent the money directly allocated to them by Congress. Similarly, when Congress appropriates money to New Mexico institutions of higher learning, under this Court's holding in Sego, the Legislature lacks authority to direct the use of such funds. The MLLA does not specifically appropriate funds to or for school purposes. Simply because the MLLA gives discretion to our Legislature does not mean that the Legislature is at liberty to ignore state constitutional limitations on its discretion. The MLLA has neither expressly nor impliedly preempted the application of Article XII, Section 3 because restricting funds appropriated for educational purposes to public schools is not incompatible with the purposes announced in the MLLA. Thus, Intervenors' argument that funds from the MLLA that are used for the Instructional Material Fund are federal funds which are "not subject to state constitutional limitations" is without merit.

{30} The Court of Appeals held that the direct recipients of the IML financial program are the parents of the children, and therefore the benefit to private schools is not direct enough to violate Article XII, Section 3. Moses, 2015-NMCA-036, ¶ 40. We can not agree that Article XII, Section 3 only prohibits direct support to private schools. The broad language of this provision and the history of its adoption and the efforts to amend it evince a clear intent to restrict both direct and indirect support to sectarian, denominational, or private schools, colleges, or universities. Our interpretation is supported by the failed attempt in 1969 of the delegates to the New Mexico Constitutional Convention to amend the precursor of Article XII, Section 3. Report of the Constitutional Revision Commission 158 (1967). Using the Alaska Constitution as a template, the Constitutional Revision Commission proposed revising the precursor of Article XII, Section 3 to read "[t]he public schools and institutions of the state shall be free from sectarian control. No money shall be paid from public funds for the direct benefit of any religious or other private educational institution." New Mexico Legislative Council Service, Workbook of Selected Constitutions Prepared For Delegates to the New Mexico Constitutional Convention 1969 (July 15, 1969) (emphasis added). This proposed revision would not have been necessary if a reasonable interpretation of Article XII, Section 3 as written only precluded direct support of sectarian and private schools. However, the proposed revision was never submitted to the voters for ratification in December 1969. See generally Proposed New Mexico Constitution (as adopted by the New Mexico Constitutional Convention of 1969) (October 20, 1969).

{31} Instead, the Constitutional Convention proposed a constitutional amendment that would address the crux of the question: may public funds be used to provide free textbooks to all students, including those who attend private schools? See id. at 45. The constitutional amendment submitted to the voters for adoption read: "The legislature shall provide for a system of free textbooks for use by school children of this state. The system shall be administered by the state board of education." Id. The Legislative Council Service warned the Constitutional Convention that "[t]his [provision] violates the Enabling Act and conflicts with other provisions of the proposed constitution." New Mexico Legislative Council Service, A New Constitution for New Mexico? An Analysis of Major Changes and Arguments For and Against 43 (October 31, 1969). Specifically, the Legislative Council Service was concerned that "[t]his provision requires the state to indirectly aid and support sectarian and denominational schools." Id. Notwithstanding the Legislative Council Service's concerns, the Constitutional Convention submitted this constitutional amendment to the voters for ratification, which the voters rejected. See Proposed New Mexico Constitution at 45; N.M. Const. art. XII, § 3.

{32} The history of Congressman Blaine's attempt to amend the United States Constitution coupled with the New Mexico Enabling Act demonstrates why Article XII, Section 3 cannot be interpreted under jurisprudence analyzing the Establishment Clause. Article XII, Section 3 must be interpreted consistent with cases analyzing similar Blaine amendments under state constitutions. For example, in California Teachers Ass'n v. Riles, the California Supreme Court addressed a challenge to a California law authorizing the Superintendent of Public Instruction to lend to students attending non-profit, nonpublic schools textbooks used in the public schools without charge. See generally 632 P.2d 953 (Cal. 1981). Article IX, Section 8 of the California Constitution provided that "[n]o public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools . . . ." Similar to Article XII, Section 3 of the New Mexico Constitution, this constitutional provision incorporated a Blaine-like amendment for sectarian and denominational schools, but it also extended the restriction to nonpublic schools. Additionally, Article XVI, Section 5 of the California Constitution provided:

> Neither the Legislature, nor any county, city and county, township, school district, or other municipal corporation, shall ever make an appropriation, or pay from any public fund whatever, or grant anything to or in aid of any religious sect, church, creed, or sectarian purpose, or help to support or sustain any school, college, university, hospital, or other institution controlled by any religious creed, church, or sectarian denomination whatever . . . .

{33} In California Teachers Ass'n, the California Supreme Court was critical of the "child benefit theory" in light of its state constitutional provision because the "doctrine may be used to justify any type of aid to sectarian schools[;] . . . practically every proper expenditure for school purposes aids the child." 632 P.2d at 957, 960 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The California Supreme Court reasoned that "the application of the 'child benefit' theory in this circumstance 'ignores substance for form, reality for rhetoric, and would lead to total circumvention of the principles of our Constitution.' " Id. at 963 (emphasis added) (citation omitted). The California Supreme Court noted that the broad language of Article IX, Section 8 and Article XVI, Section 5 of the California Constitution "do not confine their prohibition against financing sectarian schools in whole or in part to support for their religious teaching function, as distinguished from secular instruction." California Teachers Ass'n, 632 P.2d at 964 (emphasis added). As a result, a full majority of the California Supreme Court concluded that the textbook program could not survive state constitutional scrutiny, even if the benefit to the schools was only incidental. See id. at 961-62 n.12.

{34} In Gaffney v. State Department of Education, the Nebraska Supreme Court addressed the constitutionality of a textbook lending program under Article VII, Section 11 of the Nebraska Constitution:

> Neither the state Legislature nor any county, city or other public corporation, shall ever make any appropriation from any public fund, or grant any public land in aid of any sectarian or denominational school or college, or any educational institution which is not exclusively owned and controlled by the state or a governmental subdivision thereof.

220 N.W.2d 550, 553 (Neb. 1974) (quoting Neb. Const. art. VII, § 11 (emphasis in original) (internal quotation marks omitted)). The Nebraska Supreme Court relied on the broad language of Article VII, Section 11 of the Nebraska Constitution to hold that the textbook loan program unconstitutionally furnished aid to private sectarian schools. Gaffney, 220 N.W.2d at 557. The Nebraska Supreme Court concluded that the fact that the loan of textbooks was to the parents and students was not determinative because the program "lends strength and support to the school and, although indirectly, lends strength and support to the sponsoring sectarian institution." Id.

{35} The Supreme Courts of Oregon, Massachusetts, and Missouri interpreted similar Blaine-like state constitutional provisions and determined that even indirect aid to the sectarian, denominational, or private schools violates the constitutional provision. See Dickman v. Sch. Dist. No. 62C, Or. City, of Clackamas Cty., 366 P.2d 533, 543 (Or. 1961) (en banc) (holding that "the aid is extended to the pupil only as a member of the school" the pupil attends, and although the pupil may share in the indirect benefit, "such aid is an asset to" the sectarian or private school); see also Bloom v. Sch. Comm. of Springfield, 379 N.E.2d 578, 580 (Mass. 1978) (same); Paster v. Tussey, 512 S.W.2d 97, 104 (Mo. 1974) (en banc) (same).

{36} South Dakota and Hawaii have reached similar conclusions under their state constitutions. This is important because like New Mexico, these states were required to adopt Blaine-like amendments into their respective state constitutions for their admission into the Union. For example, in In re Certification of a Question of Law from the United States District Court, District of South Dakota, Southern Division, the South Dakota Supreme Court addressed a textbook lending program in which the defendants raised arguments similar to those raised by Respondent and Intervenors in this case. See generally 372 N.W.2d 113 (S.D. 1985). The South Dakota Supreme Court noted that it was charged "with the responsibility of interpreting provisions of [its] state constitution that are more restrictive than the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution." Id. at 116, 118 ("[T]hose provisions of our constitution . . . are not mere reiterations of the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution but are more restrictive as prohibiting aid in every form." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). In ultimately holding that the textbook loan program was unconstitutional, the South Dakota Supreme Court specifically rejected the defendants' analogy between the textbook lending program "and the lending of books by the public libraries in the state," because any benefit to sectarian or private schools violated its state constitutional provision. Id. at 117.

{37} In addition, Hawaii, which was the last state admitted into the Union, has a constitutional provision similar to New Mexico's. Article X, Section 1 of the Hawaii Constitution provides: "[N]or shall public funds be appropriated for the support or benefit of any sectarian or nonsectarian private educational institution . . . ." Like the New Mexico Constitution, the Hawaii Constitution is more restrictive than the federal Establishment Clause. In Spears v. Honda, the Hawaii Supreme Court addressed the constitutionality of a statute requiring state-subsidized bus transportation for all school children, including sectarian and private school students. 449 P.2d 130, 132, 135, 135 n.5 (Haw. 1968). The Court attributed great significance to the history of what was then Article IX, Section 1 of the Hawaii Constitution, now codified as Hawaii Constitution Article X, Section 1. Spears, 449 P.2d at 134-36. The Court's review of the constitutional history of Article IX, Section 1 revealed that the prohibition on using public funds to benefit private schools in Hawaii was intended to narrow the gap between the quality of education provided by private schools and public schools. Spears, 449 P.2d at 132-33, 135 n.5.

{38} The Spears Court concluded that it was important to understand that, unlike the Establishment Clause of the United States Constitution, what was then Article IX, Section 1 of the Hawaii Constitution was not exclusively about religion. 449 P.2d at 137-38. The Court found that

> [(1)] the bus subsidy buil[t] up, strengthen[ed] and ma[d]e successful the nonpublic schools[; (2)] the subsidy induce[d] attendance at nonpublic schools, where the school children are exposed to a curriculum that, in many cases, if not generally, promotes the special interests and biases of the nonpublic group that controls the school[; and (3)] to the extent that the State [paid] out funds to carriers owned by the nonpublic schools or agents thereof, the State [gave] tangible support or benefit to such schools.

Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). The Spears Court ultimately held that the bus subsidy violated Article IX, Section 1, because it constituted an appropriation of public funds to non-public schools. Id. at 139. It is worth noting that the Spears Court suggested that the Legislature "return to the people to ask them to decide whether their State Constitution should be amended to grant the Legislature the power that it seeks, in this case, the power to provide 'support or benefit' to nonpublic schools." Id.

{39} Article XII, Section 3 of the New Mexico Constitution prohibits the use of any part of the proceeds from the sale or disposal of any land granted to the state by Congress or any other funds appropriated, levied, or collected for educational purposes for sectarian, denominational schools. The framers of our Constitution chose to further restrict the use of public funds by prohibiting their use for the support of private schools. As a result, a public school under the control of the State can directly receive funds, while a private school not under the exclusive control of the State can not receive either direct or indirect support.

{40} It is clear that private schools in New Mexico have control of what instructional materials will be purchased with their allocation of instructional material funds. The fact that students who attend private schools, just like students who attend public schools, are only loaned these instructional materials is not material to the analysis. Private schools benefit because they do not have to buy instructional materials with money they obtain by tuition or donations and they can divert such money to other uses in their schools. Consistent with the rules of statutory construction and the majority of jurisdictions interpreting similar state constitutional provisions, the IML violates Article XII, Section 3 because it provides support to private schools.

IV. Conclusion

{41} We reverse the Court of Appeals and the district court and determine that the IML violates New Mexico Constitution Article XII, Section 3.

{42} IT IS SO ORDERED.

{1} A jury convicted Jeremy Nichols of child abuse resulting in death or great bodily harm, finding him guilty on a theory of negligently permitting medical neglect of his six-month-old son Kaden Nichols that allegedly resulted in the child's death. Finding the conviction unsupported by substantial evidence in the record, we reverse the conviction and dismiss the charge.

BACKROUND

{2} Alycia Nichols,[1] Jeremy Nichols' wife, gave birth to Kaden and his twin brother Bryce in September 2005. The twins were delivered by Caesarean section after the doctor made several unsuccessful attempts to get Kaden into a position where he could be delivered naturally. Kaden was stuck in the birth canal for a period of time, resulting in bruising over the majority of his body. Alycia described Kaden as "black and blue from head to toe."

{3} Because the babies were six weeks premature at delivery they remained hospitalized in the neonatal intensive care unit (NICU) at Presbyterian Hospital in Albuquerque for several weeks. They both had a gastroesophageal reflux disorder, a condition that allows food and acid to come from the stomach into the esophagus and mouth and causes irritation. They also had episodes of bradycardia, a condition that causes the heart rate to drop and requires "stimulation or oxygen to get it back up again."

{4} Kaden was discharged on October 24, 2005, after spending about six weeks in NICU. Bryce was sent home two weeks later. Following release from Presbyterian, the babies continued on medications to help with the reflux and slept with apnea monitors that measured breathing and chest wall movement.

{5} A few months after bringing the babies home, the parents started noticing little bruises, identified as petechiae, on both babies' arms and legs. At first, the parents thought the bruising was caused by swaddling the babies too tightly or by the way they burped the babies or by the way they held the babies in the air while playing. The bruising continued, however, and seemed to be worse on Kaden than on Bryce. Kaden also had experienced nosebleeds and bleeding around his gums.

{6} At the babies' four-month well-child appointment on January 24, 2006, Alycia told Dr. Eric Keller, the babies' pediatrician, that Kaden had a bloody nose almost every day and some bleeding gums. Dr. Keller decided not to administer vaccinations to either baby because he was concerned about the unresolved bleeding problems.

{7} Dr. Keller referred Kaden to Tricore Lab and ordered several blood tests. The blood test results were abnormal, so Dr. Keller advised the parents to take Kaden to a hematologist at University of New Mexico Hospital (UNMH). Shortly after the referral was made for Kaden, Alycia's mother called Dr. Keller's office and asked that the doctor also refer Bryce, stating, "Bryce['s] bruising [is] worse than Kaden['s]." Both babies were seen by the hematologist.

{8} Following the appointment with the hematologist, UNMH left Alycia a message stating that the blood test results were normal for both babies. Alycia then rescheduled the babies' four-month vaccinations with a nurse at Dr. Keller's office. Shortly before that appointment, however, the parents noticed bruising on Bryce's abdomen.

{9} On the morning of March 15, 2006—two days before Jeremy was criminally accused of medical neglect—Alycia and Jeremy took the babies to Dr. Keller's office for the vaccination appointment and showed Bryce's abdominal bruise to the nurse. The nurse called Dr. Keller. Dr. Keller asked the parents whether they had the results from the hematologist appointment and then called UNMH himself to get a clear answer. Dr. Keller decided not to administer the shots at that time and scheduled another exam for the following week.

{10} That night, Alycia and Jeremy went out to dinner with relatives. Jeremy's sister, Jennifer, babysat Kaden and Bryce at the Nichols' apartment. Alycia asked Jennifer to keep the babies awake until Alycia and the others returned from dinner because she wanted the relatives to meet the twins. She also asked Jennifer to feed the babies and put them in clean outfits.

{11} After dinner, everyone returned to the Nichols' apartment to see the babies. Both babies were recovering from colds, and Jennifer informed the parents that the babies had been a little fussy. Alycia noticed "[Kaden] was acting very different than he normally acts." Alycia took the babies' temperatures, which were normal, and checked on the babies during the night. She was "worried about [Kaden] because of how he was acting, and woke up like every forty five minutes just from worrying, touching him and touching his tummy to make sure he was still breathing."

{12} On the morning of March 16—the day of Kaden's death—Alycia woke the babies up at about 6:45 a.m., fed them bottles, and bathed them. She put the babies in their room and left around 9:00 a.m. to run errands. She testified that the babies appeared to be acting normally. "As far as I can recall, [Kaden] was himself. I don't remember him being sick or pale or anything like that. I remember him just being himself."

{13} While Alycia was gone, Jeremy tried to feed the babies cereal. Bryce ate, but Kaden would not eat and was blowing the food out of his mouth. Jeremy said it appeared that Kaden was hungry but just could not swallow the food. When Alycia came home, Bryce was napping and Jeremy was holding Kaden, who was fussy. Alycia took a shower and got dressed, and then at about noon she and Jeremy awoke the babies to feed them. According to Alycia, the babies appeared normal, "[p]erfect" in fact. Alycia then left for a 12:45 hair appointment at a nearby mall.

{14} Jeremy, in an attempt to calm Kaden, put on a movie and sat with him on the couch. According to Jeremy, Kaden would go "in and out" between being content and being fussy. Jeremy tried to feed Kaden a bottle because he thought Kaden was hungry, but Kaden only took about two cubic centimeters, which was much less than he normally took.

{15} When Alycia finished her hair appointment, she called Jeremy to see if she should go to the store. She could hear crying in the background, a cry she described as an "I want to be held" cry, not an inconsolable cry. Jeremy told Alycia that the boys were acting fussy and asked her to come straight home.

Emergency Treatment: Kaden

{16} Alycia arrived home approximately fifteen minutes later, around 3:15 p.m. When she walked in, Jeremy was rocking Kaden on the couch, and Bryce was in his crib. Alycia noticed that Kaden's legs seemed "ashy" and thought his diaper was too tight or that Jeremy was holding him too tightly. Kaden also appeared to be lethargic. Alycia took Kaden's temperature and it was 95. Jeremy wrapped Kaden in a blanket and gave him "baby Tylenol." Five or ten minutes later, Jeremy and Alycia retook Kaden's temperature and it was 95.7.

{17} Thinking Kaden was "just sick" and not in a "life threatening" situation, Alycia called her aunt for advice on how to treat him. Her aunt was a pediatric nurse who provided healthcare advice by phone. Alycia was on the phone with her aunt for about fifteen minutes. While Alycia was on the phone with her aunt, Jeremy noticed Kaden's breathing become increasingly lighter and Alycia noticed his legs getting more discolored. Alycia's aunt advised Alycia to call 911.

{18} At 3:39 p.m., Alycia called 911. Jeremy began infant CPR on Kaden. While Alycia was on the phone with the 911 operator, Jeremy told her that Kaden had stopped breathing.

{19} The paramedics arrived eight minutes later at 3:47 p.m. and went to the back bedroom where Jeremy was giving Kaden CPR. Kaden was unconscious, was not breathing on his own, and had no pulse. The paramedics initiated CPR, attempted to ventilate Kaden with a bag-valve mask, and inserted an intraosseous line to administer medications to the bloodstream.

{20} Having no success with resuscitation, the paramedics transported Kaden by ambulance to the Lovelace West Mesa Medical Center (Lovelace). Kaden arrived at Lovelace at 4:28 p.m. Dr. Sanjay Kholdwadwala, the emergency room doctor who took over Kaden's care, continued CPR and administrated medications but Kaden never regained consciousness. Kaden was pronounced dead at 4:47 p.m. An autopsy of Kaden revealed pooled blood in his abdomen and a large laceration to his liver. His cause of death was determined to be loss of blood associated with blunt abdominal trauma and the lacerated liver.

Emergency Treatment: Bryce

{21} Bryce was also transported to Lovelace on March 16. The paramedic attending to Bryce told Alycia that Bryce's "vitals were fine" and his temperature and heart rate were likely elevated because of the commotion, but Alycia insisted that he was in need of treatment. She told the paramedics that "just minutes ago Kaden looked the same way as Bryce does right now, and Bryce is heading in the same direction and whatever is happening to Kaden is happening to Bryce." The paramedics finally agreed and transported Bryce and Alycia in an ambulance to Lovelace.

{22} Bryce arrived at Lovelace at 4:45 p.m. Dr. Kholdwadwala, after leaving Kaden, checked Bryce's vital signs and ordered a transfer to UNMH for treatment because Lovelace did not have a pediatric intensive care unit. Bryce was admitted to UNMH that day. CT films revealed fluid around his liver indicating a mild liver injury. Bryce was discharged from UNMH on March 21, 2006.

Criminal Charges

{23} On suspicion that the injuries to both babies were a result of child abuse, detectives from the Albuquerque Police Department were dispatched to Lovelace to conduct an investigation. After several interviews with both parents and several of the medical professionals who attended to Kaden and Bryce, the detectives identified Jeremy as the sole suspect. On March 17, 2006, the day after Kaden died, Jeremy was arrested and charged with multiple counts of first-degree felony child abuse contrary to NMSA 1978, Section 30-6-1(D)(1) (2005, amended 2009).

DISCUSSION

{24} Section 30-6-1(D)(1) defines the crime of child abuse: "Abuse of a child consists of a person knowingly, intentionally or negligently, and without justifiable cause, causing or permitting a child to be . . . placed in a situation that may endanger the child's life or health." Abuse of a child that does not result in death or great bodily harm is, for the first offense, a third-degree felony. See § 30-6-1(E). However, if the abuse results in great bodily harm to or death of the child, then the offense is a first-degree felony with a mandatory sentence of at least eighteen years' incarceration. See id. (providing that child abuse resulting in great bodily harm is a first-degree felony); § 30-6-1(F) (providing that negligent child abuse resulting in the death of a child is a first-degree felony); § 30-6-1(G) (providing that intentional child abuse resulting in the death of a child twelve to eighteen years of age is a first-degree felony); NMSA 1978, § 31-18-15(A)(3) (2005, amended 2007) (providing that the basic sentence for a first-degree felony is eighteen years imprisonment); see also § 30-6-1(H) (providing that child abuse resulting in the death of a child less than twelve years of age is a first-degree felony); § 31-18-15(A)(1) (providing that the basic sentence for a first-degree felony resulting in the death of a child is life imprisonment).

{25} At trial, the State alleged more than one theory for how Jeremy had placed Kaden in a situation that endangered his life and caused his death and a theory of how Jeremy had placed Bryce in a situation that endangered him and caused him great bodily harm. The State's theories were, in summary:

(1) that Jeremy either intentionally or negligently caused or permitted the fatal abdominal and liver injuries that resulted in Kaden's death; the jury found Jeremy not guilty of all such charges;

(2) that Jeremy either intentionally or negligently caused endangerment to Kaden by medical neglect, failing to provide or obtain medical care necessary for Kaden's well-being, resulting in his death or great bodily harm; the jury also found Jeremy not guilty of all such charges;

(3) that Jeremy negligently permitted endangerment to Kaden by the same medical neglect resulting in death or great bodily harm, for which the jury found Jeremy guilty of a single charge;

(4) that Jeremy permitted endangerment to Kaden by medical neglect not resulting in death or great bodily harm; the jury found Jeremy not guilty of this charge; and

(5) that Jeremy either intentionally or negligently caused or permitted endangerment to Kaden's brother, Bryce, that resulted in great bodily harm; the jury found Jeremy not guilty of all such charges.

{26} To recapitulate, after a fourteen-day trial the State was unsuccessful in proving beyond a reasonable doubt that Jeremy caused or permitted Kaden's fatal injuries or that Jeremy caused endangerment by medical neglect. Out of multiple charges and alternative charges, the jury found Jeremy guilty of a single count: negligently permitting endangerment by medical neglect resulting in Kaden's death. Jeremy's conviction for permitting medical neglect of Kaden was based on a theory not of inflicting the fatal injuries but on one of not providing or obtaining necessary medical care to save Kaden's life. The district court sentenced Jeremy to the basic term of eighteen years' imprisonment.

{27} Jeremy appealed his conviction on several grounds including, relevant to this opinion, that the jury verdict was not supported by substantial evidence. After reviewing the evidence, our Court of Appeals affirmed Jeremy's conviction. State v. Nichols, 2014-NMCA-040, ¶¶ 1, 2, 321 P.3d 937. We granted certiorari. 2014-NMCERT-003.

{28} The theory on which the State presented its one successful count—negligently permitting medical neglect—gives rise to at least one legal issue in the context of this case where the jury also found Jeremy not guilty of causing medical neglect. We address that legal issue—and the hopeless confusion left by conflicting jury verdicts—in the hope of providing clarity for the benefit of future prosecutions. We then proceed to the main question: whether Defendant's single conviction finds evidentiary support in the record.

In the context of medical neglect, causing and permitting define identical criminal acts, giving rise to conflicting verdicts in this case

{29} As previously set forth, the State presented separate charges for causing endangerment by medical neglect and permitting endangerment by medical neglect. First, the State charged that Jeremy "caused" Kaden's medical neglect (either intentionally or negligently) by failing to obtain necessary medical care, which resulted in Kaden's death. The jury returned not guilty verdicts on these charges, thereby establishing a jury finding that Jeremy did not cause medical neglect.

{30} The State also submitted a charge that Jeremy negligently "permitted" medical neglect of Kaden. The district court gave the following instruction:

> For you to find Jeremy Nichols guilty of child abuse resulting in death or great bodily harm, . . . the state must prove to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt each of the following elements of the crime:
> 1. Jeremy Nichols permitted Kaden Nichols to be placed in a situation which endangered the life or health of Kaden Nichols, to wit: medical neglect;
> 2. The defendant acted with reckless disregard and without justification. To find that Jeremy Nichols acted with reckless disregard, you must find that Jeremy Nichols knew or should have known the defendant's actions or failure to act created a substantial and foreseeable risk, the defendant disregarded that risk and the defendant was wholly indifferent to the consequences of the failure to act or conduct and to the welfare and safety of Kaden Nichols;
> 3. Jeremy Nichols was a parent, guardian or custodian of the child, or the defendant had accepted responsibility for the child's welfare;
> 4. Jeremy Nichols's actions or failure to act resulted in the death of or great bodily harm to Kaden Nichols;
> 5. Kaden Nichols was under the age of 18;
> 6. This happened in New Mexico on or between the 15th day of March, 2006 and the 16th day of March, 2006.

{31} The jury, after finding Jeremy not guilty of causing medical neglect, found him guilty of negligently permitting medical neglect, meaning that the jury must have drawn a distinction between causing and permitting medical neglect. Jeremy, in a post-trial motion, argued that there was no meaningful distinction between causing and permitting medical neglect in the context of this case, thus properly preserving the issue for appellate review. See State v. Lopez, 2007-NMSC-037, ¶ 15, 142 N.M. 138, 164 P.3d 19 ("In order to preserve an issue for appeal, a defendant must make a timely objection that specifically apprises the trial court of the nature of the claimed error and invokes an intelligent ruling thereon.").

{32} Our courts have repeatedly stated that "causing" and "permitting" child abuse are distinct theories, one premised upon active abuse (causing), the other upon "the passive act of allowing the abuse to occur" (permitting). See State v. Cabezuela, 2011-NMSC-041, ¶ 26, 150 N.M. 654, 265 P.3d 705 (quoting State v. Leal, 1986-NMCA-075, ¶¶ 13, 19, 104 N.M. 506, 723 P.2d 977 (internal quotation marks omitted)). Our Court of Appeals in Leal held that ordinarily these theories must be charged in the alternative, unless "it is not clear who actually inflicted the abuse, but the evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant either caused the abuse or permitted it to occur." 1986-NMCA-075, ¶¶ 13-14. The exception recognized in Leal typically would arise when the evidence shows that a child was abused in the presence of two or more caregivers, one who actually inflicted the abuse while the other stood by, passively permitting the abuse to take place. See id. ("Thus, properly charged and proven, the statute covers the situation where it is not clear which individual actually inflicted the injury."). Absent such evidence the general rule would apply, that causing and permitting child abuse are distinct theories that must be charged in the alternative when supported by the evidence.

{33} Implicit in Leal's reasoning is that causing child abuse is synonymous with inflicting the abuse, and permitting child abuse refers to the passive act of failing to prevent someone else—a third person—from inflicting the abuse.[2] Put another way, causing and permitting abuse correlate with primary and secondary responsibility for the victim's injury. By including both theories in the statute, the Legislature ensured that both active and passive abusers would be held equally responsible.

{34} Causing and permitting abuse seem to lose their distinction, however, when the charge is based on a theory of endangerment by medical neglect. In that context, there is no distinct active and passive, or primary and secondary, conduct. Medical neglect, by definition, can only be charged when someone fails to seek or provide necessary medical care, a theory that implies passive involvement. See Black's Law Dictionary 1196 (10th ed. 2014) (defining "medical neglect" as "[f]ailure to provide medical, dental, or psychiatric care that is necessary to prevent or to treat serious physical or emotional injury or illness"); see also § 30-6-1(A)(2) ("'[N]eglect'" [for purposes of the child abandonment or abuse statute] means that a child is without proper parental care and control of subsistence, education, medical or other care or control necessary for the child's well-being because of the faults or habits of the child's parents, guardian or custodian or their neglect or refusal, when able to do so, to provide them.").

{35} Logically, however, permitting endangerment by medical neglect makes no sense. A person, acting alone, does not permit himself or herself to fail to seek medical care. And in the case of two or more people present when the medical neglect occurs, each person independently either fails to act and is culpable for endangerment by medical neglect, or does not fail to act in which case there is no neglect. In both situations, each person who fails to act is primarily responsible and therefore must have caused the abuse.

{36} Thus, while causing and permitting child abuse are in most cases distinct theories that can be charged in the alternative, in the specific context of endangerment by medical neglect, charging a defendant with permitting abuse is likely to cause confusion. In this case, the State alleged that Jeremy both caused and permitted endangerment by medical neglect, without providing any explanation of the difference between the two theories. The State cannot offer a confusing array of evidence, submit several vague jury instructions on various potential theories, and leave to the jury the responsibility of putting it all together to find a basis for a conviction. Cf., e.g., State v. Cabezuela, 2015-NMSC-016, ¶ 37, 350 P.3d 1145 ("Part of the fundamental-error analysis is 'whether a reasonable juror would have been confused or misdirected by the jury instruction.'" (quoting State v. Sandoval, 2011-NMSC-022, ¶ 13, 150 N.M. 224, 258 P.3d 1016)). As a result, the verdicts rendered by the jury—not guilty of causing medical neglect and guilty of permitting medical neglect—hopelessly conflict under our legal analysis and preclude any determination of which culpable act was the actual basis for the jury's conviction of Jeremy.

{37} However, we need not base our ultimate decision on the foregoing legal analysis. Our review of the record demonstrates that the State did not prove, and indeed presented no evidence to prove, an essential element in the crime—that Jeremy's alleged endangerment by medical neglect actually caused Kaden's death. The State also failed to prove that Jeremy acted "with reckless disregard." For those reasons, his conviction must be reversed and the charges vacated.

The evidence presented does not establish that medical neglect caused Kaden's death

{38} For this Court to uphold a conviction of first-degree child abuse on a theory of endangerment by medical neglect, the statute requires proof of causation. In this case, as the jury was instructed, the State had to prove that Jeremy's "actions or failure to act resulted in the death of or great bodily harm to Kaden Nichols." Under the statute, "[i]f the abuse results in great bodily harm to [or death of] the child, the [accused] is guilty of a first-degree felony." Section 30-6-1(E)-(F). On the other hand, child abuse by endangerment "that does not result in the child's death or great bodily harm is, for a first offense, . . . a third degree felony," § 30-6-1(E), for which the jury found Jeremy not guilty.

{39} Causation must be proved by substantial evidence. As we recently stated in State v. Consaul, issued by this Court after the trial in the case at bar, "[w]ithout any proof of causation, the charge of criminal negligence (or now criminal recklessness) [resulting in death or great bodily harm] completely fails for lack of substantial evidence . . . ." 2014-NMSC-030, ¶ 49, 332 P.3d 850. To illustrate, under the State's overarching, yet unsuccessful, theory of culpability—that Jeremy inflicted the liver injury—proving causation would not have been a problem. The medical evidence clearly established a connection between the liver injury and Kaden's death. But the jury found Jeremy not guilty of inflicting the liver injury.[3]

{40} Under a theory of medical neglect that results in death or great bodily harm, the State must prove more than just the neglect itself. In this case, the State was required to put forth substantial evidence that Jeremy's neglect "resulted in" Kaden's death or great bodily harm, meaning that medical neglect was at least a significant cause of his death or great bodily injury. See Consaul, 2014-NMSC-030, ¶¶ 48-49; see also UJI 14-251 NMRA (requiring the jury to find in a homicide case that "[t]he act of the defendant was a significant cause of the death of [the victim]"). In other words, the State needed medical evidence that if Jeremy had obtained medical care

[2]The latter notion that permitting child abuse requires evidence of an active abuser is reflected in our caselaw. Accord, e.g., State v. Lopez, 2007-NMSC-037, ¶¶ 8, 35 (affirming the defendant-mother's convictions of negligently permitting child abuse when the father admitted that he had dropped the infant-victim after throwing her into the air and hitting her against the ceiling); State v. Vasquez, 2010-NMCA-041, ¶¶ 1-2, 148 N.M. 202, 232 P.3d 438 (affirming the defendant-mother's conviction for negligently permitting child abuse at the hands of the victim's father); but cf., State v. Trossman, 2009-NMSC-034, ¶ 24, 146 N.M. 462, 212 P.3d 350 (reversing defendant's conviction for negligently permitting child abuse where there was no evidence of active abuse (exposure to chemicals used to manufacture methamphetamine) by another).

[3]We note that even with respect to its charge that Jeremy inflicted the fatal injuries, the State also relied on a theory of child abuse by endangerment under Section 30-6-1(D)(1): that Jeremy "caused Kaden Nichols to be placed in a situation that endangered the life or health of Kaden Nichols." We do not reach the propriety of that theory under the evidence presented in this case, but we note that Section 30-6-1(D)(2) would be a better fit. See id. ("Abuse of a child consists of a person knowingly, intentionally or negligently . . . causing or permitting a child to be . . . tortured, cruelly confined or cruelly punished . . . .").

earlier, Kaden would have lived or at least would have had a significantly greater chance of living—evidence that the alleged neglect actually contributed to the tragic result. But the State never offered any such evidence.

{41} Kaden's autopsy revealed that the cause of death was loss of blood associated with blunt abdominal trauma and a lacerated liver. Dr. Jeff Nine, the forensic pathologist who supervised Kaden's autopsy, testified that "there was a large laceration . . . mean[ing] that something, a blunt object of some sort, had struck the decedent or the decedent had struck a blunt object that caused pressure on the abdomen so severely that it broke the liver essentially in half from the back to the front."

{42} Dr. Nine testified that it is possible to survive a severe liver injury with the right kind of treatment, but stated he "[did not] think someone could have survived this injury without pretty extensive medical intervention because that's a laceration that goes all the way through the liver." Dr. Shawn Ralston, the pediatric hospitalist who treated Bryce, testified that a liver can repair itself without surgery but that such injuries often require a blood transfusion to replace the blood that is lost.

{43} This is evidence that liver injuries may be treatable, but sheds no light on when that intervention would have been necessary to save Kaden or give him an appreciably better chance of survival. Had Dr. Nine or Dr. Ralston been asked to testify that two hours, one hour or even twenty minutes would have made a material difference in Kaden's chance of survival, then the jury would have had some factual basis for its decision to convict Jeremy of a crime resulting in death. But there was no such testimony, and we wonder whether any medical expert could have provided such testimony.

{44} Without such testimony, the jury was left to speculate that if Jeremy had called 911 sooner, then perhaps the doctors would have had time to diagnose Kaden's condition and treat him successfully, such as with a blood transfusion, to prevent him from bleeding to death. Indeed, the prosecutor invited the jury to speculate. During closing argument, all the prosecutor could say about medical neglect was:

> And maybe, as you heard from the testimony, maybe had Kaden gotten medical attention after [his liver] injury was inflicted on him, maybe he would have survived as Bryce did. Bryce's injuries, of course, were not as severe as Kaden's, but perhaps Kaden would have been able to celebrate his first birthday.

{45} Clearly, a suggestion that "maybe" or "perhaps" something would or would not have happened, even if based on evidence, is not probative of anything. It is certainly not probative beyond a reasonable doubt that something would have happened—in this case the statutory element included in the jury instruction that "Jeremy Nichols' actions or failure to act resulted in the death of or great bodily harm to Kaden." Without some evidence to establish that causal connection, we are left with no more than medical neglect in a vacuum, which can constitute criminal endangerment, but not a first-degree felony.[4] See § 30-6-1(E) ("A person who commits abuse of a child that does not result in the child's death or great bodily harm is, for a first offense, guilty of a third degree felony . . . .").

{46} Our review of the trial transcript brings one possible reason for the lack of causation evidence to light. This trial was really never about medical neglect; it was about the State's theory that Jeremy battered Kaden. The State pointed repeatedly to evidence of bruising and similar injuries on both children over time, and the State blamed Jeremy. The State's theory of the fatal liver injury was that Jeremy, acting alone, caused it during the last three hours of Kaden's life before Alycia's last-minute return, when both children were alone with Jeremy. The State argued,

> The Defendant, for whatever reason, and there doesn't have to be a reason, took the life of Kaden Nichols on March 16th of '06. Whether he was being fussy because he wasn't eating because he couldn't use a spoon yet, because he was just tired, Defendant was tired of watching after the kids. He took care of those kids for about six hours. Alycia was home for a short portion of that time, checked on the kids, they were fine. The evidence that you have in front of you is that those kids were fine at 12:30 before Alycia left. Alycia didn't kill Kaden, the Defendant killed Kaden and the Defendant caused those injuries to Bryce that day on March 16th of 2006.

{47} Only then, almost as an afterthought to her closing, did the prosecutor speculate that "maybe" Kaden would have survived if he had gotten medical attention "after that injury was inflicted on him." Those few lines in the State's closing argument are the only mention of medical neglect in the State's entire closing. The rest was all about battery—inflicting the liver injury. And, of course, the jury returned a not-guilty verdict on that battery charge. Because the State lost the jury on its principal theory and failed to offer substantial evidence to prove its fall-back position, the State cannot be heard to complain. Jeremy's conviction must be reversed and the charges against him vacated for lack of substantial evidence.

The State did not present substantial evidence to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that Jeremy acted with reckless disregard

{48} In addition to proving causation, the State had to offer substantial evidence that Jeremy's conduct, in failing to provide medical care early enough, amounted to reckless disregard for the welfare and safety of Kaden. As stated above, the jury was instructed that "[t]o find that Jeremy Nichols acted with reckless disregard, you must find that Jeremy Nichols knew or should have known [his] . . . failure to act created a substantial and foreseeable risk, [he] disregarded that risk and . . . was wholly indifferent to the consequences of his failure to act."

{49} If the jury had found that Jeremy inflicted the blows that lacerated Kaden's liver, or that he was on notice that someone else had inflicted those blows, then Jeremy would have been on notice of the need for medical care. He would have observed the resulting symptoms in Kaden and, more importantly, he would have been on notice that those symptoms were serious and required immediate medical attention. Had Jeremy failed to act under those circumstances, the jury could easily have returned a verdict—supported by substantial evidence—that Jeremy was "wholly indifferent" to Kaden's welfare and "the consequences of his failure to act." But the jury found Jeremy not guilty of inflicting those blows. And it is undisputed that during those three hours from noon to 3:00 p.m. on March 16, 2006, before Alycia returned home, Jeremy was alone with the babies; no other adult was present whom Jeremy could have witnessed inflicting those tell-tale blows. Without first-hand knowledge of the source or severity of Kaden's injuries, the State had to offer other evidence to prove that Kaden's symptoms were so clear and obvious that Jeremy was criminally reckless in failing to seek immediate medical attention.

[4]We note the novelty of the State's theory of medical neglect as a form of child endangerment. While we do not find the theory objectionable on its face, this case demonstrates the care that must be taken to ensure that every theory presented to the jury is supported by the evidence. Cf. State v. Montoya, 2015-NMSC-010, ¶ 42, 345 P.3d 1056 ("When a defendant is charged with intentional child abuse resulting in the death of a child under twelve, the instruction on the lesser-included offense of reckless child abuse should only be given if the evidence could support such a theory.").

{50} In its briefing to this Court, the State argues that mundane observations like Kaden's fussiness and his decreased appetite should have alerted Jeremy to Kaden's need for medical care. Yet this was a baby with multiple, birth-related problems and concomitant symptoms almost his entire life. Kaden had been taken to regular medical appointments as well as to specialized follow-up appointments. The day before his death, both parents took Kaden to a medical appointment at which his symptoms were discussed with medical personnel. That night the babysitter, who was Jeremy's sister, and other family members observed Kaden. The State pointed out in closing argument that on the day of Kaden's death, March 16, 2006, Kaden's condition, both early in the morning and at noon, appeared to Alycia to be unremarkable. Alycia saw no need to call for any medical assistance. If Jeremy was criminally reckless earlier that day or before, then it would appear so too were Alycia and perhaps others.

{51} No one called for emergency assistance until around 3:00 that afternoon, when Kaden's breathing began to falter. On what evidence then, was the jury to have concluded that Jeremy was guilty of "reckless disregard" and being "wholly indifferent to the consequences of his failure to act"? Nothing in this record provides a satisfactory answer to that question. We cannot write an opinion saying that an infant's fussiness and lack of appetite are of such moment that a parent's failure to call 911 might put him in jail for felony child abuse. And, as we have previously explained, any theory that Jeremy was reckless for not calling 911 during the time when he had exclusive control from noon until 3:00 p.m. is inconsistent with the jury finding him not guilty of inflicting the fatal injuries during that same time.

{52} Based on this record, we cannot say with any degree of confidence what evidence would have put Jeremy on notice of Kaden's critical need of medical care, in light of the jury's finding that Jeremy did not inflict the injuries that resulted in Kaden's death. Even the State's legal arguments fail to offer any guidance. We are left utterly confused by the jury's verdict.

{53} Substantial evidence might have supported a verdict that Jeremy inflicted the fatal blow to Kaden's liver, but the jury was not so persuaded. Instead, the jury found that Jeremy was "wholly indifferent" and "reckless" for not seeking medical care, a verdict altogether unsupported by substantial evidence in the record. We cannot sustain any verdict on that basis.

CONCLUSION

{54} We reverse Jeremy Nichols' child abuse conviction under Section 30-6-1 and order that the charge be dismissed with prejudice.

{55} IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

Linda M. Vanzi, Judge

{1} At issue in this appeal is a unique application of the constitutional bar against retrial after acquittal. Defendant Ferlin Ben was charged and convicted in a nonjury trial in magistrate court for driving while intoxicated (DWI), contrary to NMSA 1978, Section 66-8-102 (2010). Defendant's conviction was expressly based on the "per se" provision of Subsection (C)(1), which is one of two statutory alternative means of committing the single offense of DWI. See State v. Lewis, 2008-NMCA-070, ¶ 27, 144 N.M. 156, 184 P.3d 1050.

{2} After a de novo appeal to the district court, Defendant was subsequently acquitted of the per se violation and convicted of the alternative provision in Subsection (A), which requires a finding of impairment to the slightest degree. Defendant now contends that double jeopardy and jurisdictional principles prevented the State from arguing impaired DWI to the jury after the magistrate court failed to convict him on that theory in the first trial. Unpersuaded, we affirm.

BACKGROUND

{3} The scant record from the magistrate court sets forth the following facts and allegations, which, for our purposes, are not in dispute. On September 19, 2013, state police stopped Defendant after observing multiple traffic violations. Defendant admitted to drinking "two beers," performed poorly on field sobriety tests, and later registered a breath alcohol concentration (BAC) of .08. The State charged Defendant in the McKinley County Magistrate Court with several traffic offenses, including misdemeanor DWI. That offense is committed when a person drives a vehicle with a BAC of .08 or higher (a per se violation), see § 66-8-102(C)(1), or, in the alternative, when a person drives while "under the influence" of intoxicating liquor or drugs (an impaired to the slightest degree violation), see § 66-8-102(A).

{4} After a nonjury trial, the court found Defendant guilty of DWI. Although the criminal complaint asserted violations of both subsections of the DWI statute, the court specified in its judgment and sentence that Defendant violated Subsection (C)(1), which is the per se violation. The judgment and sentence did not refer to the impaired DWI provision of Subsection (A).

{5} Defendant sought de novo review in the district court, where, over Defendant's objection, the State alleged both theories of DWI. A jury convicted Defendant of impaired DWI under Subsection (A) but found no violation of per se DWI under Subsection (C)(1). On appeal, Defendant now contends that (1) the magistrate court's silence as to Subsection (A) impliedly acquitted him of impaired DWI, precluding the district court's retrial on that theory according to principles of double jeopardy, and (2) the district court lacked jurisdiction to consider the theory. We review these related contentions de novo. See Victor v. N.M. Dep't of Health, 2014-NMCA-012, ¶ 22, 316 P.3d 213; State v. Andazola, 2003-NMCA-146, ¶ 14, 134 N.M. 710, 82 P.3d 77.

DISCUSSION

Double Jeopardy

{6} "All appeals from inferior tribunals to the district courts shall be tried anew in said courts on their merits, as if no trial had been had below, except as otherwise provided by law." NMSA 1978, § 39-3-1 (1955). By its own terms, this statute is necessarily subject to the Constitutions of the United States and New Mexico, which guarantee that no person shall be "twice put in jeopardy" for the same offense.[1] U.S. Const. amend. V; N.M. Const. art. II, § 15; NMSA 1978, § 30-1-10 (1963); Ludwig v. Massachusetts, 427 U.S. 618, 631 (1976); State v. Baca, 2015-NMSC-021, ¶¶ 2, 21, 46, 352 P.3d 1151 (applying double jeopardy retrial principles to a de novo appeal from magistrate court). In this case, jeopardy attached to the nonjury trial in the magistrate court "when the trial judge first start[ed] hearing evidence." Baca, 2015-NMSC-021, ¶ 46.

{7} The Double Jeopardy Clause operates to protect an individual from repeated attempts by the state, "with all its resources and power[,]" to secure a conviction, with the consequent anxiety, embarrassment, and undue expense to a defendant that results from retrial. Cnty. of Los Alamos v. Tapia, 1990-NMSC-038, ¶ 16, 109 N.M. 736, 790 P.2d 1017 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted), overruled on other grounds by City of Santa Fe v. Marquez, 2012-NMSC-031, ¶ 25, 285 P.3d 637. In common parlance, the state, upon failing to convict a defendant

[1]Neither party has argued that there is any difference in the application of the state and federal constitutional provisions to this case. We therefore "assume the two clauses require the same analysis and result." State v. O'Kelley, 1991-NMCA-049, ¶ 5, 113 N.M. 25, 822 P.2d 122.

after a full and fair opportunity to do so "is barred from a second bite of the apple." State v. Orosco, 1982-NMCA-181, ¶ 11, 99 N.M. 180, 655 P.2d 1024; see also Burks v. United States, 437 U.S. 1, 16 (1978) (noting that the United States Supreme Court necessarily affords "finality to a jury's verdict of acquittal—no matter how erroneous its decision" (emphasis omitted)).

{8} On the other hand, there is no constitutional prohibition against retrial after a conviction is set aside, except where the conviction is vacated for insufficient evidence. State v. Lizzol, 2007-NMSC-024, ¶¶ 13-14, 141 N.M. 705, 160 P.3d 886. The distinction between retrial after an acquittal and retrial after a conviction reversed for trial error has historically been justified on various rationales, including the legal fiction of waiver—that a defendant who successfully appeals his conviction for trial error "waives" any objection to a second prosecution, see Trono v. United States, 199 U.S. 521, 530-31 (1905), and the doctrine of continuing jeopardy—that jeopardy terminates upon an acquittal but continues through an appeal and into the subsequent retrial. Justices of Bos. Mun. Ct. v. Lydon, 466 U.S. 294, 308 (1984) ("Interests supporting the continuing jeopardy principle involve fairness to society, lack of finality, and limited waiver.").

{9} However justified, these principles unquestionably govern our state's two-tier system of de novo appeals from off-record inferior courts, including, of course, the McKinley County Magistrate Court.

> A defendant who elects to be tried [d]e novo . . . is in no different position than is a convicted defendant who successfully appeals on the basis of the trial record and gains a reversal of his conviction and a remand of his case for a new trial. Under these circumstances, it long has been clear that the [s]tate may reprosecute.

Ludwig, 427 U.S. at 631-32; see also Lydon, 466 U.S. at 309 ("While technically the defendant is tried again, the second stage proceeding can be regarded as but an enlarged, fact-sensitive part of a single, continuous course of judicial proceedings during which, sooner or later, a defendant receives more—rather than less—of the process normally extended to criminal defendants in this nation." (alteration, internal quotation marks, and citation omitted)). Thus, having been convicted—and not acquitted—of DWI in the magistrate court, Defendant was in the same position as any individual who successfully appeals his conviction for trial error. "Under these circumstances, it has long been clear that the [s]tate may reprosecute." Lydon, 466 U.S. at 305. To escape this conclusion, Defendant divides the single offense of DWI into its alternative theories, contending that his conviction in the first trial on one theory of DWI (the per se theory) necessarily constitutes an implied acquittal on the alternative theory on which no conviction was entered (the impaired DWI theory).

{10} The genesis of the modern implied acquittal doctrine is Green v. United States, 355 U.S. 184 (1957). In Green, the United States Supreme Court held that a verdict convicting a defendant of a lesser included offense of second degree murder, but silent as to the greater offense of first degree murder, constituted an implied acquittal of the greater offense, prohibiting retrial. Id. at 190-91. In brief, the Court believed the case was no different, for double jeopardy purposes, "than if the jury had returned a verdict which expressly read: 'We find the defendant not guilty of murder in the first degree but guilty of murder in the second degree.' " Id. at 191; see also Price v. Georgia, 398 U.S. 323, 329 (1970) ("[T]his Court has consistently refused to rule that jeopardy for an offense continues after an acquittal, whether that acquittal is express or implied by a conviction on a lesser included offense when the jury was given a full opportunity to return a verdict on the greater charge." (footnote omitted)).

{11} Our cases have neither read Green as broadly as Defendant suggests nor applied Green outside the context of lesser included offenses. See State v. Torrez, 2013-NMSC-034, ¶ 13, 305 P.3d 944 (citing with approval the observation that "courts have refused to imply an acquittal unless a conviction of one crime logically excludes guilt of another crime" (alteration, internal quotation marks, and citation omitted)); O'Kelley, 1991-NMCA-049, ¶ 14 ("An implied acquittal generally occurs when the jury is instructed to choose between a greater and a lesser offense, and chooses the lesser."). "Only where the jury is given the full opportunity to return a verdict either on the greater or alternatively on the lesser offense does the doctrine of implied acquittal obtain." O'Kelley, 1991-NMCA-049, ¶ 16. In fact, the United States Supreme Court itself has long since disclaimed a broad reading of Green. See United States v. Tateo, 377 U.S. 463, 465 n.1 (1964) (stating that Green "holds only that when one is convicted of a lesser offense included in that charged in the original indictment, he can be retried only for the offense of which he was convicted rather than that with which he was originally charged").

{12} When a defendant is convicted based on one of two alternative means of committing a single crime, which is the situation presented in this case, the near uniform majority of jurisdictions that have considered the issue have refused to imply an acquittal on the other alternative. See United States v. Ham, 58 F.3d 78, 84-86 (4th Cir. 1995); United States v. Wood, 958 F.2d 963, 971-72 (10th Cir. 1992); United States ex rel. Jackson v. Follette, 462 F.2d 1041, 1047, 1049-50 (2d Cir. 1972); Beebe v. Nelson, 37 F. Supp. 2d 1304, 1308 (D. Kan. 1999); Schiro v. State, 533 N.E.2d 1201, 1207-08 (Ind. 1989); State v. Pexa, 574 N.W.2d 344, 347 (Iowa 1998) ("A failure to consider an alternative definition of the offense charged does not constitute an acquittal of that offense for double jeopardy purposes."); State v. Wade, 161 P.3d 704, 715 (Kan. 2007); Commonwealth v. Carlino, 865 N.E.2d 767, 774-75 (Mass. 2007); People v. Jackson, 231 N.E.2d 722, 728-30 (N.Y. 1967); State v. Wright, 203 P.3d 1027, 1035 (Wash. 2009) (en banc); State v. Kent, 678 S.E.2d 26, 30-33 (W. Va. 2009); cf. State v. Terwilliger, 104 A.3d 638, 651-52 (Conn. 2014) (refusing to imply an acquittal where a general verdict form made it impossible to know which theory supported the defendant's conviction); Torrez, 2013-NMSC-034, ¶¶ 10-14 (same). But see Terry v. Potter, 111 F.3d 454, 458 (6th Cir. 1997); State v. Hescock, 989 P.2d 1251, 1256-57 (Wash. Ct.App. 1999) (applying Terry).

{13} In Wright, for instance, the Washington Supreme Court recognized that the logic of Green does not follow when a defendant is prosecuted for a single offense that can be committed in multiple ways because "jeopardy attaches to the offense as a whole rather than to the particular form in which it is tried, so that if an individual succeeds in getting a conviction set aside, the defendant's 'continuing jeopardy' applies to any alternative way of committing the same offense." Wright, 203 P.3d at 1035. Several other courts have taken this approach. See, e.g., Wood, 958 F.2d at 972 (holding that, where the jury was instructed on one offense, and the defendant was convicted of that offense, retrial was not barred); Terwilliger, 104 A.3d at 667-68 (Roger, C.J., concurring); Beebe, 37 F. Supp. 2d at 1307. Their reasoning is persuasive because "[a] defendant charged and tried under multiple statutory alternatives experiences the same jeopardy as one charged and tried on a single theory." Wright, 203 P.3d at 1035.

That defendant "is in jeopardy of a single conviction and subject to a single punishment, whether the [s]tate charges a single alternative or several." Id.

{14} In another example, the Court of Appeals of New York came to the same result by applying the waiver theory of double jeopardy (discussed briefly above) as opposed to the continuing jeopardy doctrine.

> The defendant's argument stands or falls on his contention that felony murder and premeditated murder are separate offenses and that the jury was given the opportunity to return a verdict on the felony murder offense but failed to do so. If felony murder and premeditated murder constitute one and the same offense—viz., murder in the first degree— [the defendant] was not put in double jeopardy at his second trial when he was tried for felony murder as well as premeditated murder; for if a defendant is convicted of a single offense and takes a successful appeal from his judgment of conviction, he waives his constitutional protection against double jeopardy for that offense[.]

Jackson, 231 N.E.2d at 729. In sum, these cases stand for the sound proposition that a conviction on only one theory of an offense is no less a conviction, and typical double jeopardy retrial principles apply to the offense as a whole.

{15} However, there is a limited exception to this general rule, evident in decisions that read Green as simply applying collateral estoppel (issue preclusion) notions in a double jeopardy case. According to this analysis, the defendant's conviction of second degree murder in Green "established the existence of a fact (the state of mind required for that offense) that was inconsistent with his being guilty of first[]degree murder, so his subsequent conviction of that offense was barred." Kennedy v. Washington, 986 F.2d 1129, 1134 (7th Cir. 1993). "That is all that 'implied acquittal' means." Id.

{16} These issue-preclusion cases essentially state the following rule: A conviction based on one of several statutory means of committing a single offense may imply an acquittal only when the conviction necessarily involves a factual finding inconsistent with guilt on the other theory. See, e.g., Schiro v. Farley, 510 U.S. 222, 236 (1994) (distinguishing Green because "[t]he failure to return a verdict does not have collateral estoppel effect . . . unless the record establishes that the issue was actually and necessarily decided in the defendant's favor"); Ham, 58 F.3d at 85 ("A jury's failure to decide an issue will be treated as an implied acquittal only where the jury's verdict necessarily resolves an issue in the defendant's favor."); Carlino, 865 N.E.2d at 775 (recognizing that the appellate court "[could not] discern the jury's intention from their silence."); State v. Gause, 971 N.E.2d 341, 344-45 (N.Y. 2012) (holding that a conviction for depraved indifference murder necessarily precluded a subsequent finding that the defendant committed intentional murder because those alternative theories are inconsistent counts under New York law).

{17} This approach was taken by the highest court in Massachusetts in an opinion that has been discussed favorably by our own Supreme Court. See Torrez, 2013-NMSC-034, ¶¶ 12-14 (discussing Carlino for double jeopardy purposes). In Carlino, the defendant was tried and convicted on two alternative theories of first degree murder. 865 N.E.2d at 769. However, the defendant was also charged with a third alternative theory (felony murder), but the verdict slip did not indicate whether he was acquitted or convicted on that theory. Id. The murder conviction was later reversed, and the defendant was tried again and found guilty under all three theories, including felony murder. Id. at 770. He appealed and made the same argument that Defendant makes in this case: that the fact finder's failure to mark one of several alternative theories on a verdict slip is tantamount to an acquittal on that theory, prohibiting retrial. Id. at 772-73. The Carlino court rejected that argument because "a true acquittal requires a verdict on the facts and merits." Id. at 775 (alteration, internal quotation marks, and citation omitted). Nothing in the defendant's convictions for two theories of first degree murder "logically require[d] the conclusion that the jury must have acquitted the defendant of felony-murder." Id. at 774.

{18} We can think of no reason that the principles discussed at length in this Opinion do not apply in the present context, involving a de novo appeal from a nonjury trial in magistrate court. See Ludwig, 427 U.S. at 631 ("A defendant who elects to be tried [d]e novo . . . is in no different position than is a convicted defendant who successfully appeals on the basis of the trial record and gains a reversal of his conviction and a remand of his case for a new trial."). Defendant has not made any factual argument about what occurred in the off-record proceedings below. He has limited his argument to the doctrine of implied acquittal, while citing to cases that are inapposite to that doctrine.

{19} We hold that there is no implied acquittal when a fact finder convicts an individual for violation of one of multiple alternative means of committing a single offense, unless the conviction necessarily resolves a fact in the defendant's favor. This holding is consistent with the analysis of implied acquittal and collateral estoppel applied in the majority of jurisdictions and discussed with approval by our own Supreme Court in Torrez, 2013-NMSC-034, ¶ 13 ("[C]ourts have refused to imply an acquittal unless a conviction of one crime logically excludes guilt of another crime." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)). It is also supported by society's interest in a decision on the merits in a criminal case and by our state's general understanding "that what constitutes an acquittal . . . is whether the ruling of the judge . . . actually represents a resolution, correct or not, of some or all of the factual elements of the offense charged." Lizzol, 2007-NMSC-024, ¶ 9 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Since Defendant was convicted in magistrate court based on the per se theory of DWI, and since that conviction is not logically inconsistent with a finding of impaired DWI, Defendant's double jeopardy rights were not violated when he was retried de novo on the impaired theory in the district court.

Jurisdiction

{20} Defendant also makes a cursory argument that the district court lacked jurisdiction to consider the impaired DWI theory since the magistrate court never ruled on it. "All appeals from inferior tribunals to the district courts shall be tried anew in said courts on their merits, as if no trial had been had below, except as otherwise provided by law." Section 39-3-1. In this case, the district court had appellate jurisdiction to "conduct[] a new trial, as if the trial in the lower court had not occurred." State v. Heinsen, 2004-NMCA-110, ¶ 11, 136 N.M. 295, 97 P.3d 627 (alteration, internal quotation marks, and citation omitted), aff'd, 2005-NMSC-035, 138 N.M. 441, 121 P.3d 1040. The only potential limitation on its authority to retry Defendant de novo was the Double Jeopardy Clause, and we have already held that double jeopardy was not violated.

CONCLUSION

{21} Defendant's conviction is affirmed.
